This collection brings together Idane and Other Poems and A Shuttle in the Crypt, two powerful and distinctive volumes of the early poetry of Nobel Prize laureate and Nigerian exile Wole Soyinka.

Taken as a whole, Soyinka’s early poetry may be viewed as a valiant effort to reconcile the mysterious legacy of the old with the reality of the present-day African continent as the poet sees it. Today our shared anxiety has become far more complex and insidious, arising from tyranny, terrorism, and the invisible power of the “global elite.” As Wole Soyinka suggests, the climate of fear that has enveloped the world is far more threatening than any of the problems that faced the nation of Africa when the poet first saw it.

Soyinka’s early work is a searching, questioning search for innocence, for a world that is true to God’s original plan for human society. It is rife with hope, a hope that is as fragile as it is strong. His early poems were sparked long before 9/11, when a passenger plane was brought down into the ground, but the world has not recovered from the terror this event has unleashed.

Today, the world is in a state of anxiety and depression, and the poet’s early works are a reminder of the hope that is still possible. In these poems, Soyinka reflects on the power of the human spirit to overcome darkness and evil. His early work is a call to action, a call to stand up against the forces of darkness and to rebuild the world into a place of peace and freedom.

The climate of fear is a condition that affects all of us, and it is a condition that we must fight against. In his early work, Soyinka provides a blueprint for how we can overcome fear and build a world that is free from tyranny and terrorism.

Wole Soyinka’s work is a reminder that we must never give up on hope. In these early poems, he reminds us that we are not alone in our struggle, and that there is always a chance for a better tomorrow. In his early work, Soyinka provides a vision of a world that is free from fear and tyranny, and it is a vision that we must work towards with all of our might.

Wole Soyinka’s early work is a masterpiece that will continue to inspire and challenge us for generations to come. In these poems, we see a poet who is committed to building a world that is free from fear and tyranny, and it is a world that we must work towards with all of our might.
collection of poetry, his first in ten years, spans the poet’s recent experience of exile from Nigeria as well as the journeys that have followed his Nobel Prize for Literature award. Here are reflections on the deaths of politicians, dictators and dissident friends as well as invocations to fellow writers Ken Saro-Wiwa, Josef Brodsky and Chinua Achebe. In sections tellingly entitled ‘Outsiders’, ‘Of Exits’ or the poem sequence ‘Twelve Canticles for the Zealot’, Soyinka confronts political realities: religious fundamentalism, bigotry and the repression of free speech. Others such as ‘Lost Poems’, ‘Doctored Vision’ or ‘Visiting Trees (Night Hunt)’ are evidence of a more private, interior search.
